Weir Had to Beg for Fights on His Arrival Here, but Soon Made a Name for Himself by Beating a Number of Well-Thought-Of Fighters.

NO. 5.—IKE WEIR.

Copyright, 1911, by The Evening World, Inc.
On Oct. 5, 1885, four days after Ike Weir had won the gold medal in the boxing tournament at Manchester, he met and defeated W. J. Harlow in ten rounds at Salford, England, for a purse. On Dec. 11, he entered another tournament at Manchester, this time a professional, all-weight affair. In the preliminary and semi-final he defeated W. Joyce and Tom Jones, but lost in the final to George Hoden, who was the 125-pound champion of England at that time. All of these men outweighed Weir by many pounds. On Jan. 6, 1886, Weir secured a draw with Ulrich Conley at Preston, England, in six rounds. The men fought for a small purse. One month later he defeated Billy Sykes at Liverpool for a purse, lasting under nine rounds and beating his opponent in three minutes. The boy had several other minor fights around through England. Young Weir decided to come to America and arrived in Boston on March 10, 1888, on the steamship Isthmian. He participated in many sporting affairs at the different clubs, but had a very hard time getting matches. He didn't look like a fighter and had to almost beg the managers before they would allow him to get a match. It was not until May 28 that he finally secured a bout with William Snice before the Athenian Club of Boston. Snice was looked upon as a clever featherweight. Weir, being new in the country, was not known, while his opponent got $10. This fight showed the Boston sports that Weir had something in him. During the spring season, Weir laid off, as all the boxing clubs were closed and the fighting game had stopped temporarily. His manager, Ed Holke, entered him in several walking matches. Weir had been considered quite a walker over in Ireland. The boy also took part in several cross-country races around at some of the different winter fairs throughout Massachusetts.

Resumes Fighting.

On Oct. 23, 1888, Weir started in fighting again, meeting James Fuhly at the Athenian Club and knocking him out in five rounds. On Nov. 1, before a private club in Boston, Weir defeated Martin Burns of Dover, N. H., in six hard rounds. On Dec. 5, he fought with Cornelius Sullivan, a clever young lawyer from Boston. Weir, who had fought with George Badger in private before one of the Boston clubs for a purse of $50, and knocked him out in one round. On Jan. 4, 1889, he fought Johnny Aaron in five rounds. Aaron was considered one of the cleverest featherweights around Boston. Weir's wonderful cleverness and his success in disposing of Boston's best featherweights made a big impression on the fans of Beantown. This was especially true in the case of the fight with Aaron, who was a very strong and powerful fighter. Weir's manager, Ed Holke, entered him in several walking matches. Weir had been considered quite a walker over in Ireland. The boy also took part in several cross-country races around at some of the different winter fairs throughout Massachusetts.

WALL STREET.

An easier feeling in regard to the Moroccan situation this morning sent prices of leading securities about half a point above the closing range of last week. While not over active, there was a good buying demand for Union, Southern and Northern Pacific, Reading, Steel and Atchafon. Canadian Pacific scored the extreme gain of 1-2 points.
